At least I think so. - Head of the Tiger Sugar Daddy Sometimes you see something, and you think, "that's really weird". Especially if the person looks like that's their normal state of being, and they're in a group of people and are laughing together. You know what I'm talking about, right? I like to look into things, but sometimes I'm on the wrong track. That happened to me today. I was on my way to the store, and I saw someone on the sidewalk. They had long, black hair. And was wearing a green shirt and brown pants. It kind of looked like they were being escorted to a limo by their friends. Sure enough, after I went inside the store and went to the car, it was just a limo driver. Well, I guess I'm more normal now, because I didn't ask the driver who they were. If you have two numbers that you want to factor, you just enter them into the program and then it finds all the factors for you. You can find the factors in different ways. You can either use the button at the top for the plain traditional factorization, or by choosing either of the other options it shows you the different ways the factors can be listed, as well as showing you where the factors occur in each number, or it tells you if both numbers have the same factors and how many. To see the factors in a different way, you can drag the slider to change the way the factors are listed. This makes it easy to compare one factorization with another, as you can quickly tell if they are the same. Version 1.4: Added the sliders to the top to change the way the factors are listed, and to change the default from 2 to 5. Added the slider to choose which way the factors are displayed. Added a big button at the bottom of the screen to show you which factors of the two numbers are in the same position in the two numbers.
